

Last Sunday, Maggie and her parents went to a fast food shop for lunch. Maggie wanted to have French fries, a hamburger and some cola for lunch. They were very excited. Maggie's mum bought a bottle of milk and a big hamburger. Her dad bought a beef hamburger, two bottles of cola and a packet of French fries for himself and Maggie. They devoured the food because the food was very delicious. They were delighted.

Suddenly, a naughty boy ran towards Maggie. He was rude that he made Maggie drop her French fries with ketchup onto her blouse. Then, the ketchup spread all over her knees. Maggie got cross with the boy. She thought the boy was awful.

Maggie asked the boy in an angry way, 'Don't you know that we can't run in restaurant?' The boy was embarrassed and said, 'Sorry, I know that we can't run in restaurants. I will never run again!' 'So, don't run again!' replied Maggie.

Maggie's parents grinned. They thought Maggie was brave because she could tell other children what was the right thing to do in the restaurant.